

Challenging the Home Health Aide Exam

In a situation where an individual allows the CNA certification to expire, the CNA is able to challenge the training. The individual must still pass the exam and the individual's competency must still be demonstrated to the employer and current continuing education must be documented.

If the individual also held a HHA certification, the individual may challenge the HHA portion of the training. The employer must still verify competency of this individual.

Additional Training Requirements for CNAs to Be Home Health Aides

1. Use of ambulation equipment in the home
2. Home transfer & ambulation techniques
3. Home safety measures
4. Care and disposal of contaminated supplies in the home
5. Home management and homemaking